Caring for Pets during the COVID-19 Outbreak

According to the World Organisation for Animal Health (OIE), there is no evidence that companion animals are playing a role in the spread of COVID-19. However, during this time of incredible uncertainty, our pets still need veterinary care.

Should your animal fall ill with an infection, suffer an injury or need some other form of treatment, it may not be clear how you can ensure they receive the care they need. As regions, countries and cities enact increasing restrictions on movement, these tips can help you to keep your pet fit and well and to access veterinary help should you need it.

More Information

For more information on caring for pets during the COVID-19 crisis, visit the World Small Animal Veterinary Association website (WSAVA.org) and contact your veterinarian.